Time-honored Custom in the Senate Broken, and Resolutions in Behalf of Negro Soldiers Pressed for Consideration Before Submission of President's Message-Special Message on the Subject Is Coming.

In anticipation of the adoption by the Senate of the resolutions offered yesterday, asking for information relating to the discharge of the negro troops implicated in the Brownsville disorders, all available data on that subject are now being collected, and President Roosevelt is preparing a special message which will by sent to Congress at the same time. Members of the two Houses who have talked with bim about the matter say that nobody, after reading his message, will be able to arrive at any other conclusion than that he did exactly right in

The Senate had hardly been in session ten minutes before the dismissal of the battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry was up for consideration. The time-worn ceremony of passing resolutions providing committees to notify the President and the "other House" that the Senate had met was barely finished when the columnar figure of Senator Penrose was seen facing the Vice President. It was known at once throughout the Senate that something not down on the programme was taking place. Senators Hale and Cullom, the personification of Senatorial dignity and wisdom, had introduced the organizing resolutions. The young Penn-sylvania Senator was not expected to offer any resolution connected with the stitutional safeguard. iniative of the session. Senator Spooner, who was over on the Democratic side engaged in conversation when Senator Penrose addresed the Chair, seemed about to dip into the affair, but contented himself by simply asking that the resolution be read again. Senator Aldrich, who also manifested a good deal of interest in an apparent attack on the President, addressed the Chair in an excited manner, when it seemed that Ser tor Foraker might not be allowed to offer his resolution, and demanded that the Ohio Senator have a chance to present it Hale and besought him to "stop this."

Senator Warren finally, when an interval of quiet returned, objected to the pres ent consideration of the resolutions, and asked that they lie over under the rules.
